Allowable Subject Matter

1. Claims 1-7 are allowed.

The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: The instant application claims a layer of photoresist comprising photosensitive molecules each having an axis, wherein each molecule aligns with its axis having a particular direction with respect to the normal to the surface of the substrate when the resist is coated onto the substrate, wherein each molecule has a different sensitivity to light as described by the instant claim 1. One reference of note was found in the search of the prior art. Natansohn et al (5,173,381) is cited for its teaching of a novel series of azo polymers, copolymers and polymer blends for reversible optical storage devices are described. Various azobenzenes can be bound in the side chain or within the main chain of long chain polymers such as polyester, polystyrene and poly methacrylates with very short or no spacers to form amorphous polymers which as a film or deposited on a transparent substrate can be used to record optical information using a linearly polarized laser beam which induces optical anisotropy in the film. The information can be erased thermally by heating above the glass transition temperature, or optically by overwriting with light polarized in a predefined zero direction or with circularly polarized light. A thin film is deposited on a transparent substrate, such as a glass sheet. Recording of optical information is achieved using linearly polarized light which induces optical anisotropy in the polymer film. The information or image is written by illuminating the film with linearly polarized light which is absorbed by the azo molecule in the film. A substantial number of the polarizable molecules subsequently align themselves in a direction which is perpendicular to the writing electric field direction. This preferential alignment of the molecules appears to be stable over the long term and results in a local anisotropy in the optical properties of the film, in particular dichroism and birefringence can be observed. The reference fails to teach or suggest employing molecules of different wavelengths are required by the instant claims.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
